

Clayton's Band believed firmly in its non-union status and this may have caused its demise. Union bands refused to march with it, and the Musicians' Union brought pressure to stop some performers. Indeed, a scheduled live radio broadcast in 1949 for WVOS was cancelled at the last minute as the Band was already on "stage" at the Hunt Memorial Building in Liberty Square (top right).

The Band's last director, Harry Smith, died in 1963 and there was never again a regular leader.

Clayton's Band has a romance and a mystique unrivaled in the history of Ellenville organizations. Brothers, sons, nephews, and multiple generations of some families – Wolfs, Booths, Mances, Rauners, Freers, Grays, and others – played in the Band.

As years went by, some former members of the band donated their uniforms to the local history collection of the Library and the accumulation of programs, pictures – even instruments – grew. While Terwilliger House Museum was gradually being restored and opened in the early 1980s, then-Library Director Marion Dumond and Museum Clerk Pat Christian began to develop plans to create a permanent Clayton's Band exhibit to share the expanding collection with the public.

It seemed logical to form a "Remembering Clayton's" Committee composed of former Band members Bruce Gillette, Bob Constant, and Bob Wolf. They met regularly with Director Marion Dumond to plan the reunion events, bringing pictures, memories and many anecdotes.

Library staff compiled a master list of Band members from pictures, minutes, newspaper articles and reminiscences. The search for former Band members expanded and eventually ninety invitations were sent. Thirty-seven alumni ultimately returned.

The Library's own Frank O'Connor constructed the "bandstand" at Terwilliger House, Gus St. Anthony painted the mural, mannequins were found, and the assembling of the exhibit continued (see photo, previous page, top left).

Who would lead the Clayton's Memorial Band? Bruce Belanger, a local resident and music teacher at the Ellenville Central School, came to our rescue. He chose music that would be appropriate for musicians who hadn't touched an instrument in twenty years or more, organized a support core of ten student and adult musicians who were willing to assist, and planned a single rehearsal, to be held for two hours on the day of the reunion.

When the great day arrived, rehearsal began at ➔

Below, Clayton's Military Band, 1939. Front row: George Reichert, Baxter Constant, Joseph Rauner Jr., Chauncey Rowan, Edward Fitzgerald, George Wolf, William Booth, Harold Booth, Robert Madden, Kenneth Mance, Donald Bradford; middle row: Floyd Howe, Bernard Wenig, Robert Hyatt, Raymond Suckles, Charles Grant, Warren Robinson, Clarence Wood, Robert Constant, Nathan Weiss, Clarence Coniker; back row: Arthur Brown, Robert Wolf, Matthew Wolf, Julius Wolf, Weston Ruth, Donald Sprague, Harry Smith.

