"If an error is corrected whenever it is recognized as such, the path of error is the path of truth." – Hans Reichenbach

We try really, really hard to avoid mistakes in this magazine! We double-check facts and figures and dates, the spelling of names, the accuracy of quotes, etc., whenever possible. If we can't easily decipher hand-written notes, we'll call to confirm, when possible. (Which is why we prefer emailed or faxed or typed material, in that order!) Gosh, even minor punctuation errors haunt us!

Even though we are so dependent on the material sent in by numerous individuals, and would like to assume that THEY know how so-and-so's name is spelled, we don't assume. As the old saw goes, to ASSUME makes a you-know-what of "U" and "ME"!

All this becomes compounded under the pressure of deadlines; when material comes in late, there's less time to check it. And, as is often the case, pulling an all-nighter to meet the implacable printer's deadline, one can get a bit foggy; yes, one can stare at the same glaring error for five minutes and still not see it. That's how every now and then a page number, issue number, month (even year!) is wrong; it just slipped past the slightly-bloodshot eyes.

Last month, Hadley DePuy's column simply failed to get listed in the Contents! Oh, it was in the magazine, but somehow, if it wasn't gremlins at work, it must have been the self-imposed sleep deprivation and some sloppy cut & paste work (well, the 'how' is that the Contents page is the last page made up, naturally)! Since our ace proofreader was long-since sawing wood by then, only one person (unless that gremlin turns up!) is culpable: yours truly.

When an error is found (and the DePuy oversight JUST got noticed a few minutes ago when using last month's contents as the template for this month's page!), the first thing to do – after the blood has returned to the brain, the draining thereof and that sinking feeling in the gut being the VERY first reaction – is to take stock and determine if the mistake is really serious. As in lawsuit serious, or "How can we ever face them again?" serious. It rarely is. In fact, it may go unnoticed by 99% of all readers. Alas, it ALWAYS gets noticed by the ONE person you hoped never catches it, right?

Which is what happened when we printed the list of Chamber members last issue. Now, we KNEW there would be some out-dated info and necessary corrections, which is why we ask everyone to review their own listing and send us the corrected data. Surely, if we never got the new phone number or email address from you, we 'assume' the old info is still valid. Several persons reviewed the lists, and we tried to use the best data we had, but sometimes spreadsheet cells get crossed, or typos happen; we've been reviewing this extra-thoroughly for our print brochure, including phone calls to EACH member to confirm the data. AND we've already printed updated and corrected pages to the online version of the magazine, several times, and will keep working to make sure that online and print versions are as accurate as possible; next month we will print all corrections, additions, changes, updates, and new members we receive up until the deadline date.

But we owe a special apology to Il Paradiso because, like Dr. DePuy, we simply failed to include them on the list, even though they were paid-up members. The online version was immediately corrected when we found out, and we will fully detail them here next month, along with any others needing corrections or additions.
